Expo 2027 Yokohama's Master Plan looks to the future of achieving a green society.

It's no coincidence that Expo 2027 Yokohama is set three years before the target year of the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals. The Expo organisers state in the Master Plan that it is their intention to share not only their results of the SDGs actions they have taken and how they are leading them to a conclusion but also their new post-2030 initiatives for achieving a green society—such as those for attaining carbon neutrality in 2050, addressing the climate crisis, and protecting and sustainably utilising biodiversity.

A hint of how the Japanese host city of Yokohama plans to promote this was in its award-winning pavilion at Expo 2022 Floriade, with the theme of satoyama. This word refers to the Japanese concept of the coexistence of nature and people.

The Master Plan identifies how Expo 2027 Yokohama will be a platform to explore how humanity can shift from an industrialised world to an environmentally orientated society – focusing on the nature-based future we desire for 2050.

Plans for the legacy of International Horticultural Exhibition 2024 Chengdu

Chengdu has been designated as a garden city. Overseeing this development are the Chengdu Municipal Government and the Chengdu Eastern New Area Administrative Committee. These governing bodies are also overseeing the construction of the International Horticultural Exhibition 2024 Chengdu. The Expo will promote how Chengdu will develop in the future as part of the Chengdu-Chongqing Economic Circle.
